The Princes in the Tower

Edward IV of England died on 9th April 1493 after an illness. Before he died Edward asked his brother Richard to take care of his oldest son Edward until he became king. However, Richard wanted to be king himself.

Edward, who was only 12, was travelling to London with his uncle and half-brother when they met Richard on the road. He had Edward's uncle and half-brother arrested and put in prison. Then Richard took Edward to London. Edward's mother was so terrified that she took her other children to Westminster Abbey where they would be safe. She knew that Richard would do anything to become king. Richard took the boy to the Tower of London, where he would stay until the coronation (when he would be made king). The date of the ceremony was postponed from 4th May to 25th June. Meanwhile, Edward's younger brother Richard was sent to live with him. They were seen playing near the Tower. However, while they were there, the government of the time decided neither of them could be king as their parents hadn't been married. As a result, their uncle became King Richard. Then the princes disappeared.

Two hundred years later, workmen found two skeletons in a wooden box in the Tower. King Charles II had these bones buried in Westminster Cathedral. Since the discovery of DNA technology, historians have asked for permission to do experiments on the bones, but so far nobody has been allowed to test them. Even if they did, we will never know who killed them.

The princes' story has been written about in many books, including a Shakespeare play, and the boys are also the subject of many paintings. It seems so awful that two young children could be murdered while their uncle got away with the crime. But without the scientific facts, we just do not know what happened to them.

11 Read part of an email you receive from an English-speaking friend.

We were talking about crime today in school. The teacher told us about a project called 'Restoring Justice', where criminals have to talk to their victims and say sorry to them. What do you think about that? Have you ever been the victim of a crime? What happened, and how did it make you feel? I think that all criminals should go to prison for as long as possible so that we can feel safe. Do you agree?

Now write an email to your friend (100-120 words).
