The White Helmets: Modern Heroes

Have you heard of the White Helmets? Emerging during the recent war in Syria, they are normal people who have volunteered to join groups who attempt to rescue people after bombs are dropped in the areas where they live.

A group including bakers, tailors, painters and students, they have saved tens of thousands of people after bombs destroy residential blocks of flats, markets or bakeries where people carry out their daily lives. ² _____ In some of the most dangerous areas such as Aleppo, these volunteers have stepped in to saving lives every day in places where police and soldiers cannot help.

³ _____ This is because these audacious volunteers are themselves bombed after they go in to save victims of the first attack. Their work is even more dangerous because they have limited resources and do not have the sophisticated safety equipment that firefighters would have in the West. ⁴ _____ However, since 2013 they have received special training in Turkey, funded by Japan and the UK and the USA.

A Netflix documentary was made about them in 2016 to highlight the work they do and to bring attention to the suffering of the Syrian people in the civil war. ⁵ _____ Regardless of politics, what is most important is that they save lives. They were even nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize in 2016 - though they did not win it.
