Globalization – are you a citizen of the world?

Globalization is the process which connects people from different countries as they buy and sell products, exchange ideas, travel and share their cultures. It has happened for centuries, but has been faster in the last 20 years due to increased access to the internet and cheap air travel.

Nowadays, it is easier to communicate with people all over the world without leaving the house. A teenager in England can play computer games against a kid in Japan or Brazil, and we can contact people on the other side of the planet in seconds. In the past if you sent a letter to a family member in another country it could take weeks or months to arrive, but these days an email arrives in a second.

There are lots of good things about globalization; we can enjoy American TV, Colombian coffee, Italian clothes, Japanese technology and Indian food almost anywhere we go. However, many people think globalization is a bad thing – they say that the individual culture of countries is disappearing while American brands like Starbucks and McDonald's can be seen everywhere, making money which should stay in the country where it is spent.

The environment is another thing that unites the peoples of the world, because we all share a planet and have to protect it. Global warming affects everyone, as most countries rely on the ocean and the land for food and jobs. Working with other countries will help us to solve these international problems.

This globalized world is full of opportunities, and we can decide what to see, do and buy. If people think about what they are doing, they can enjoy the advantages of globalization while protecting their cultures by supporting local traditions, buying locally produced goods, and using their own language.

1 Globalization is a new thing.
2 Technology has helped this development. _____
3 Gaming is an example of globalization. _____
4 Communication is not as fast as one hundred years ago. _____
5 Some brands are seen as an example of the problems of globalization. _____
6 Globalization may stop people talking about environmental issues. _____
7 Global warming only affects people who live by the ocean. _____
8 Globalization means more choice in our lives. _____
9 Everyone has the power to help their culture with the choices they make. _____
10 Buying food from other countries is good for your own country. _____
