Cars of the Future

Many people need cars to travel. Will this change in the future?

No Pollution!

Most people's cars use gasoline. Millions of these cars cause a lot of pollution. Cars of the future won't pollute the environment. They'll use electricity from solar energy.

No Driver?

Cars without a driver already exist, but in the future, they will be common. In their cars, people will watch movies, read the news, or eat breakfast on their way to work! Buses, trains, and taxis won't have drivers.

"Talking" Cars

Some cars have the ability to communicate with other cars. This is not common today, but it will be! Cars will connect with other cars around them to avoid accidents. But cars won't talk like people do. They'll give information about their speed and direction. Travel will be a lot safer.

How will these things change our lives?

Will communication be different in ten years?

In my opinion, communication won't be very different ten years from now. Here is the reason.

We will use better technology, but we will do the same things. People will still make calls, send texts, and write emails. They will upload photos, send messages and write blog posts like we do now.

To conclude, people's communication habits won't be very different ten years from now. We'll only have better technology.

Circle the correct option.

The writer thinks …

1 communication will / won't be very different in the future.
2 technology will be better / worse in the future.
3 people will / won't do the same things.
