Sample answer:

By the time they are sixteen, almost all teenagers in rich countries have a smartphone. In fact, if they don't have one, they almost think it's an injustice. However, are smartphones really a necessity?

On the one hand, if you don't have a smartphone these days, you aren't connected to your friends because they all have one. Furthermore, smartphones have many useful applications which are free or cost very little.

Nevertheless, this doesn't mean that all teenagers should have a smartphone. Some of them might be happy without one. In addition if teenagers don't have a smartphone, they can still access the internet on a tablet or a laptop.

In my opinion, if a teenager wants a smartphone, his parents should buy him one unless they're poor. When you're a teenager, it's awful if you feel different from your friends and can't hang out with them online.
